Sample Evaluation Form

Questionnaires are a useful tool for the comprehensive evaluation of a workshop. Writing out a set of answers requires participants to give questions more thoughts than oral feedback. Written replies serve as a reliable source of self-critical improvement for the trainers as well as providing credible documentation of the outcome of their workshop towards a third party.

The following model questionnaire is applicable for the evaluation of a conflict transformation workshop in schools. Once again, the overall rule of considering the aim of the tool before making use of it applies here. Who is the questionnaire aimed at? The trainer(s) should bear in mind that completing questionnaires requires a greater ability to articulate and express oneself in words. The questions below can be adapted to a certain extent, yet one should refrain from using them for a group younger than 16. Youth between 10 and 15 can also fill in questionnaires similar to the one below but with certain adaptations. With younger trainees, it is advisable to use tools such as those introduced in the section on communication/feedback (target evaluation).

It is just as important to consider what use the answers will serve, and for whom. Do I need this evaluation primarily to improve myself? In this case, it is necessary to ask more questions specifically about the trainer. Maybe I want to find out more about how the trainees improved their skills with the help of the workshop, in which case specific questions on skills should be asked before and after the training. For example, if I want to find out about the ability to define "conflict", ask for a definition beforehand and afterwards in order to compare the two answers.

Sample Schedule

This is a sample schedule of a conflict transformation workshop. It integrates the experiences of training participants during the program. All counselors participating in the program between 2002 and 2006 attended similar workshops. Furthermore, this schedule is an extended version of a workshop these counselors held with students between March and June 2006. Some counselors (namely, Abeer Anani-Jerusalem, Mariam Dal'ab-Tulkarem, Jihan Naji-Al Ram, Fuat Salah – Qabatia, Ahmad Salah-Jenin and Amal Zein-ArRam) have volunteered to work on it together with the KURVE/MEND team.

This sample schedule targets people with almost no previous experience using the method of constructive conflict transformation as introduced in this manual. Thus, it should be considered as an introductory seminar. As such, it does not address every aspect mentioned in this manual; let alone all aspects of conflict transformation. Follow-ups and advanced trainings are indispensable. Logically, the best learning results are achieved if a trainer starts with the basic skills such as those cited below, and then builds on them with further activities on mediation or using the "Four Ears". A trainer should never try to 'squeeze' in everything over a short period. The proverb "less is more" should be considered as a ground rule!

The schedule outlined below applies to youth and adults. There are some considerations to take into account here. Naturally, activities that are more abstract can be carried out at workshops for adults (such as the drama triangle instead of the positive and negative traits). It is also possible to have more extended discussions. These opportunities are marked on the table below with an "A. Additionally, if the trainees are due to pass on the information contained in workshops themselves, it is important to place greater emphasis on didactic aspects specified in Chapter II of the manual. At the same time, it is useful for adults to experience training similar to one they might potentially carry out with students in the future.

A detailed plan of a schedule is a very helpful tool in preparing a seminar. The more detailed a schedule plan is, the less likely a trainer will get stuck in the middle of a workshop. If working in a team it is very important, the co-trainers should clearly decide on a division of tasks and mark it accordingly on the plan. Last but not least, emphasis will be placed once more on the basic rule of considering the aim of all of this. Who do I train? How old are they? What do they know? etc. Be sure to take into consideration all the points outlined in Part II of this manual because the schedule outlined here is no "plug and play" workshop (no general application in every situation without adaptation).

Reading list

Most of the books consulted in the writing of this manual are in German. However, there is also an abundance of literature in English around the topics of conflict transformation and non-violence. Only a very small selection of these books in English or the English version of some German books used is listed here. It should be possible to purchase some of the English books in bookstores in Palestine such as the International Bookshop on Main Street, Ramallah (Phone: 02-2958082, Fax: 02-2964106) or The Educational Bookshop, 22 Salah Eddin Street in Jerusalem (Phone: 02-6283704, Fax: 02-6280814, http://www.educationalbookshop.com). So far, there are only a limited number of manuals and books on these topics in Arabic, especially training manuals with specific instructions for conducting workshops. There may be only a few of these in the whole of the West Bank, some of which are named below.
